The entire practice was one series of accidents. Finally, in the sixth period after J. S. Phipps had been struck over the left eye by Devereux Milburn's mai let and so badly cut that it required four stitches to close the wound, the match was called off for the day. In the fourti period Larry Waterbury, riding Conover rode off Stevenson, and in some way the latter was thrown. He was knocked ou and revived with some difficulty. He was forced to leave the game.

The work of the "big four" was : revelation to the 3,000 spectators who gathered to watch the practice. Devereus Milburn was moved from back up to No while Larry Waterbury played back Rene La Montagne played No. 1, with Monte Waterbury at No. 2. Every man played as if he had never been at any other position, and there was little doubt in the minds of the crowd that the team would face the British challengers in the same positions.
